

Food Exempt from Labelling

Providing Information When There is No Label

Under the 'Australia New Zealand Food Standards Code' (the Code), some foods for retail sale do not need to bear a label.

Which foods don't need a label?

Food for retail sale that does not require a label includes food that is:

- unpackaged
- made and packaged on the premises from which it is sold, or packaged in the presence of the purchaser
- packaged food displayed in an assisted service cabinet which requires food to be served on request from the purchaser
- whole or cut fresh vegetables and fruit, in a package which displays the nature and the quality of the food (sprouting seeds are excluded from this exemption)
- delivered packaged and ready for consumption at the order of the consumer (e.g. delivered pizza)
- sold at a fundraising event
- in an 'inner' package, with a surface area of less than 30 cm² and not designed for sale without the outer (labelled) package.

Providing information when there is no label

Even though a food may be exempt from bearing a label, certain information requirements may still apply. That information needs to be provided in other ways, including:

- in documentation accompanying the food. For example, in a tear-away pamphlet.
- displayed in connection with the display of the food. For example, on a sign next to the food or on a menu board.
- verbally or in writing upon request. For example, by answering the customer's question or writing information on a takeaway container or
- declared or provided to the purchaser in some other way.

Sometimes there is more than one option for how particular information can be presented.

What information must be provided?

Depending on the food, the type of information that may need to be provided includes:

- the name of the food or the prescribed name of the food
- advisory or warning statements or declarations (e.g. the presence of allergens)
- directions for use and storage
- percentage labelling
- nutrition information panel (NIP)
- prescribed statements.

The information requirements for foods that are not required to bear a label, and the method by which that information may be presented is shown in Table I.

Note: This information is a general summary and cannot cover all situations. Food businesses are required to comply with all of the provisions of the Food Standards Code and the Food Act 2003 (Tas).
